TWILIGHT AT HOLLYWOOD.

were referred all Poems on this subject.]

To-day our maidens gathered here to strew

In their sweet custom; and at early morn,

And carnest faces fairer than the flowers.

The simple soldier from the distant State

Far down below I hear the river rush, And, standing in this city of the dead,

The voice of waters seem a human cry That rises from the breadth of all the land

The city, growing sombre in the dusk,

A nation's fortress and her capital.

Was lit with splendor forty months agone,

And up the glancing river came the boom

Sank with her; and her glory passed away,

Her arms were overthrown, her flag was torn,

Of mighty guns that held a fleet at bay;

But sorrow came upon her, and defeat,

She sank in ashes, and a people's hope

In bitter silence; and her chosen Chief

Was fettered in the fortress by the sea.

Even as a people wear away the heart In thinking on their glory and their fall.

But, O, the spirit of the first campaigns,

They sweep along a living surge of strength,

With tempest voice and crest of bayonet.

The scanty blanket wet with sleet.

And never more upon Virginia hills

The sleepless outpost, listlessness of camp,

Shall thrill the onset of the Southern lines,

The men that bore the bayonet and blade

Shall bear them now no more;

And now how cold and still!

And fit to sing a soldier's requiem,

Deep-toned and tremulous-the dirge of men

Not that their fame has need of sculptured urn.

For they have lived such lives and wrought such

Let them not perish from our hearts-speak on,

"THE CARNIVAL OF VENICE."

The sun looks out from a Southern sky

And stately, gallant mien.

They too are here—my noble lord, And she, his lady fair,

The tiny foot is in slipper cased,

The crimson dress of satin laced

With love so sad, and eyes so full,

For she is wife to him who holds

But he is near-some one is near

The dainty arm in satin folds,

With sweetly low guitar,

Who sings to her of other days,

And happiness-alas afar !

She answers all the while.

So lovely is the shoulder white

In dancing takes no part.

Is on the lady fair,

Sweet eyes which must not weep;

And, hushed, her sorrows sleep.

The plaintive heart-awakening lays,

For him is turned the graceful head,

Full well she knows those living eyes,

The brown-eyed flower girl's envying gaze

Yet to her lord's words and replies

On which the jewels break in light,

She wears no mask upon her face,

But dream you in your envy, girl,

That she with rare and radiant curl,

Wears closely masked her heart.

Ah, happier you with only flowers To wreathe your floating hair,

Can summon vassals at her call

And reign as sovereign there.

Mrs. Morrissey observed his condition, and calling him to her, directed him to occupy the seat in front of the one in which she sat. She took off a rich shawl, folded it into a sort of pillow, and picking the boy up into her arms, laid him down thereon. Shortly afterwards a vender of oranges passed through the car, and Mrs. Morrissey bought some for the lad. When the conductor came, Mrs. Morrissey paid the fare of the cripple. In a few moments the lad fell asleep.'
